The US Military

Our Military Outreach Program

bBIG[®]
COMMUNICATIONS

Often overlooked as a marketing demographic, many Fortune 500 brands have discovered that marketing to members of the US military can be among the most stable, profitable and authentic marketing channels available to them.

If you've thought about adding military members and their families into your marketing portfolio but weren't quite sure where to start, read on!

A marketing campaign aimed at this market can put your company in front of 37 million members of the US military, which includes active duty, retired, veterans, reserves, spouses and dependents.

Collectively, this group brings an annual spending power of $1.2 trillion.

Its members span across a wide array of demographic groups, so whether you're marketing to baby boomers or Gen Y, the military is a viable channel whether you're selling electronics, insurance plans, lifestyle/fitness products, cars, or any other product or service.

Nearly half (46 percent) of those on active duty, are 24 years of age or older, while more than half of the veterans are 65 or older.

HERE ARE SOME KEY MARKET CONSIDERATIONS:

- Fully employed with pay raises and exceptional benefits
- Allowed 4-6 weeks' vacation per year
- Able to relocate every 2-3 years
- Acquiring new customers for life
- The military is a tight-knit group that is highly connected. Two out of three military members say they feel an immediate bond with other military members.*
- 90% of military members have used a military discount before, and 74% actively look for brands that offer discounts. And if given a discount, 61% would shop with a brand more often, while 58% would try out a new brand.*
